SENTIMENT IN THE ARMY IN THE LAST CENTURY.

Instances When Officers Showed True Moral Courage by Declining to Go On the Field of Honor and Abide

In a letter written to a friend many years ago, General William Henry Harrison, the pinth President of the United garding ducling: "I believe that there were more duels in the northwestern army between the year 1791 and 1795, inclusive, than ever took place in the same length of time, and among so small a body of men as composed the commissioned officers of the army, either in America or any other country, at least in modern times. "I became an officer in the first mentioned year, at so early an age that it is not wonderful that I implicitly adopted he opinions of the older officers, most of whom were veterans of the revolution, upon this as well as upon other subjects connected with my conduct and duty in the profession I had chosen. I believed, therefore, in common with the larger portion of the officers, that no brave man would decline a challenge nor refrain from giving one whenever he considered that his rights or feelings had been trespassed upon. I must confess, too, that I was not altogether free from the opinion that even honor might be acquired by a well-fought

NOT A TEST OF COURAGE. "Fortunately, however, before I was engaged in a duel, either as principal or second, which terminated fatally to any one, I became convinced that all my opinions on the subject were founded on error, and none of them more so than that which depicted the situation of the successful duelist as either honorable or desirable. A short experience in the army convinced me also that fighting a duel was not an undoubted test of true courage. I know instances of duels, and desperate duels, being fought by men who would not have been selected, by officers who knew them, to lead a forlorn hope. On the contrary, I possessed the most positive testimony to prove that some of the bravest men would not be engaged in an affair of the kind under any cir cumstances.

'I present you with a reminiscence of my early military life. I introduce it not only to sustain my position, but from the respect I entertain for the memory of a gallent brother officer, long since called to receive in another world his reward for having preferred 'the praise of God to the praise of men.

LIEUTENANT DRAKE'S BRAVERY. "In the summer of the year 1793, Licutenant Drake, of the infantry of the second sub-legion, received a marked insult from another officer. As he manifested no disposition to call him to an account, some of those who wished him well, among whom I was one, spoke to him on the subject. expressing our fears that his reputation as an officer would greatly suffer if he permitted such an insult to pass un-noticed. The answer that he gave me was, that he cared not what opinions the officers might form of him, he was determined to pursue his own was determined to pursue his own course. That course was so novel in the army, that it lost him, as I supposed it would, the respect of nearly all the officers. The ensuing summer, however, gave Mr. Drake an opportunity of vindicating, most triumphantly, his conduct and principles.

"He had been stationed in a small forters, which had been exected by fortress, which had been erected by General Wayne, and had been rendered remarkable by the defeat of General St. Clair's army, three days before. The garrison consisted of a single rifle company and thirty infantry, and of the latter Drake was the immediate mander. In the beginning of July, 1794, a detachment of the army, condating of several hundred men, under the command of Major Steadard by up-attacked early in the morning by uptroops made a gallant resistance, but being turned on both flanks, and in danger of being surrounded, they retreated to the open ground around the

From this, too, they were soon dis lodged by the overpowering force of the enemy. In the retreat, many wounded men were in danger of being left, which fact being observed from the fort, the commandant, Captain Gibson, directed his own lieutenant to take the infantry (Drake's particular command) and a portion of the riflemen, and sally out to their relief. To this Drake objected, and claimed the right to command his own men, and, as a senior to the other lieutenant, his right also to the whole command. 'Oh, very well, sir,' said the captain; 'it such is your wish, take it.' 'It is my wish, sir, to do my duty, and I will en-deavor to do it now, and at all times,' was the modest reply of Drake. He accordingly sailled out, skilfully inter-posed his detachment between the retreating troops and the enemy, opened upon them a hot fire, arrested their advance, and gave an opportunity to the wounded to effect their escape, and to the broken and retreating companies to reform, and again to face the enemy. A CONSPICUOUS MARK.

"Throughout the whole affair, Drake's activity, skill and extraordinary self-possession were conspicuous. The enemy, of course, observed it as well as his friends. The numerous shots directed at him, however, like the arrows of Teucer aimed at the heart of Hector, were turned aside by Providential inter-ference, until he had accomplished al that he had been sent to perform. He then received a ball through his body and fell. A faithful corporal came to his assistance, and with his aid he reached the fort, and those two were the last of the retreating party tha entered it. Drake made it a point o honor that it should be so. Mr. Drake was rendered unfit for duty for a long time by his wound. He had not, in-deed, recovered from it in the summer of 1796, when he was my guest, at Fort Washington (Cincinnati), (where I was in command) on his way, on furlough to visit his native State, Connecticut. His friends, however, enjoyed his presence but a short time; having, as I understood, taken the yellow fever in passing through Philadelphia, he died in a few days after he reached his

ANOTHER CASE OF MORAL COURAGE

"I have another instance to relate: An officer of the army had so often and so unnecessarily wounded the feel-ings of another of the same corps, the duties of which made their association indispensable, that he considered himself bound to demand satisfaction in the usual way. They met, and the injured usual way. They met, and the injured man fell, receiving a mortal wound, as it was anticipated he would, from the superior skill of his antagonist in the use of the weapon which they used. Being possessed of a high grade of talent and an amiable character, he had the sympathy of all the officers. With others, I visited him after he had been removed to his quarters. He expressed a desire to see the officer with whom he had fought, and I was present at the had fought, and I was present at the interview. I wish I could describe, as EARLY DUELING DAYS. It merits, this interesting scene. The circumstances attending it were so deeply impressed upon my mind that they can never be effaced as long as memory holds its sent.

"In the tent were some half dozen officers, the friends of the dying man (for he had, from his amiable qualities, many and warm ones), exhibiting un-equivocal evidences of their sorrow, Conspicuous above the rest, and near the head of the rude couch, was the manly form of the commandant of the corps to which both the duelists be-longed (the beau ideal of chivalrous valor, and the Chevaller Bayard of the States, gave, as follows, his opinion re-Army), endeavoring to stiffe, as best he could, the feelings which agitated his boson. At a little distance, and in full view of the victim of his passions, sat insensible —; but I must restrain the indignation which I still feel.

"He was my brother officer, we shared together the perils of a difficult war, and in battle I know that he did his duty, and, whatever might have been his conduct to others, I never had personally any reason to complain of him. But there he sat, apparently, at least, unaffected by the mischief he had done by burying in an untimely grave a man who had never injured him, whose arm might be needed in the pending decisive battle with the hitherto triumphant enemies of his country, and whose intellect might at some future time have been usefully employed in its councils.

A DYING MAN'S FORGIVNESS. "The severe bodily pain which the dying officer had for some time suffered, had ceased, and that calm and ease succeeded which is the unequivocal harceeded which is the unequivocal har-binger of approaching death, and which a gracious Providence has provided for the mortally wounded soldier, to enable him to offer a last prayer for his dis-tant family, if he has one, or for the pardon of his own sins. Turning his intelligent eye upon his late antagonist, he mildly said: 'He had desired to see him for the purpose of asserting him of him for the purpose of assuring him of his sincere forgivness—that he wished him happiness in this world—and that, as the means of securing it, he recom-mended to him, with the sincerity of a dving man, to endeavor to restrain the violence of his passions, the indulgence of which had deprived one of life who had never injured him in thought or dead."

Theft of an Overcoat.

A middle-aged woman, accompanied by a girl and young man, entered Charles Kaufman's clothing store on Seventh street yesterday afternoon and asked to be shown a suit of clothes for her son. While the young man was looking over the clothes the mother walked around the store on a tour of investigation. She did not seem to find what she wanted, and finally went out and looked into the window. In the meantime the clerk was trying to persuade the young man to make a pur chase, when, suddenly looking around, the young man observed that his mother and sister had both gone. He said to the clerk: "You don't seem to have what I want," and went out the door. When the clerk examined his stock afterward be discovered that a valuable overcoat was missing. The woman, it appears, while examining the clothes had slipped the coat under her shawl and gone out. The son waited until she had a good start and then followed

A Dissertation on American Wines.

It is now universally conceded by even the most fanatical testotalers that a glass of thoroughly matured and pure wine is the most wholesome, health and strength giving beverage for mankind. Almost overy statemo matter how old its climate—produces grapes from which wine is pressed, but THE PASADENA WINES are made from those luscious SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA grapes which attain the highest grade of maturity and ripeness and are therefore the best wines in the market.
